What do we do?

At Storr, our goal is to provide our clients with cost effective solutions to improve employee comfort and educate them on how to apply ergonomic principles in their own work environment.

How we do it.

Storr's ergonomic evaluators are trained to analyze your processes and staffing and identify the products and configurations to support a genuinely user-friendly workspace—from basic layout and accessibility issues to ensuring proper working posture. The knowledge and experience our ergonomic team can bring to your company will help you develop a working environment that maximizes the productivity and comfort of one of your most important corporate assets—your people!

Services include:

- Initial phone evaluations
- Individual work space evaluations
- Follow up visits
- Ergonomic awareness sessions (group training)
- Individual workspace recommendations and product recommendations

Why do you need it?

In today's information-intensive business environment, with knowledge workers spending more and more time at their computers, ergonomics is far more than just some vague scientific concept. Increasingly, it's a critical component of a truly productive workspace. Research indicates employee productivity increases and worker's compensation and lost time costs decrease when organizations implement company-wide ergonomic programs. A carefully planned and well executed program can help your company maximize the return on your investment in human resources and minimize worker's compensation costs and time lost to injuries.
